Conisbro' or Conisborough Castle is picturesquely situated on a grassy and wooded hill overlooking the banks of the Don. The Castle is of Norman architecture, the building of it being ascribed to Earl de Warenne, who lived in the 12th century. The ruins consist of a fine old keep 86 feet in height, supported by strong and massive walls and buttresses, and of round towers on each side of the entrance path. The Castle and its vicinity secured the great admiration of Sir Walter Scott.
